CAUSE

Due partly to financial struggles and partly to willful neglect, Mr. Corbray has failed to make any payments to date towards the reduction of his $25,000 fine in this case. At the time supervision commenced, in December 2012, Mr. Corbray was unemployed and subsisted entirely on his wife's income and assistance from family. When a documentary film project he was working on fell through in 2013, he obtained employment as a construction flagger for several months, and subsequently worked at an insurance company for a small period of time. Earlier this year, he started taking online real estate classes and was ultimately hired as a real estate agent by a local real estate company in June 2014. To date, he reports he has not generated any income from this new employment. After discussions with his attorney, it was hoped and anticipated that Mr. Corbray would start making payments in July 2014. This has not happened.

In addition to his failure to make payments towards his fine, Mr. Corbray submitted a urine sample on February 14, 2013, which tested positive for marijuana. He denied using any marijuana and subsequent tests in March and May, 2013, were negative. In June 2014, when directed to submit a sample, he balked. He stated his belief was that he was only required to submit to a total of three drug/alcohol tests during his term of supervision. Counsel then spoke with Mr. Corbray and his drug testing obligation was clarified. On December 9, 2014, Mr. Corbray was contacted at his residence and questioned about marijuana use. At that time, he admitted to consuming marijuana as recently as December 4, 2014. He said that marijuana, for which he has a medical marijuana card, is the only thing that helps him with ongoing stress and anxiety. Mr. Corbray was reminded that he cannot use marijuana to despite having a medical marijuana card.

While Mr. Corbray's financial struggles have impacted his ability to pay throughout his term of supervision, it is also clear his ability to pay is only one component of a much larger issue. Mr. Corbray feels wronged by the legal system in this case and has been unable to transition to a point of acceptance. In conversations, it is clear that the bitterness he carries has impacted his overall compliance and it will remain a barrier to his success if not addressed. With that in mind, Mr. Corbray has agreed to participate in a mental health evaluation, to include a chemical dependency component, and follow any treatment recommendations. Ultimately, it is hoped that this evaluation process will have a positive impact on Mr. Corbray's overall wellbeing, attitude and compliance, moving forward.

It is respectfully recommended that the Court modify Mr. Corbray's conditions of probation as indicated above. Attached is a signed waiver and agreement form bearing Mr. Corbray's signature for consideration. Defense counsel has been contacted and has no objection to the proposed modification.

I swear under penalty of perjury that the following is true and correct.
